Red Stag Hunt in Scotland
2024

In the midst of the Scottish Highlands lie the huge hunting grounds of our partner. Scotland - that is the epitome of a sporting and challenging hunt for the mountain stags of this interesting hunting country.

No other country in Europe has such a high density of game. The current population is estimated at over 300,000.

You can imagine that the annual reduction alone amounts to several tens of thousands; it is no wonder that these hunts are so popular. Over the years, the stalkers have always succeeded in getting their guests to shoot. Once you have hunted in the Highlands, you will always be drawn back to this magnificent landscape with its many red and sika deer. In Scotland you don't hunt for the trophy, here hunting is still hunting. You have to stalk, watch out for the wind and sometimes approach the desired deer at the slowest possible pace. All this, combined with Scottish hospitality and the lovely stalkers, makes these hunts worthwhile.

The Scottish mountain deer does not get very strong. The Highlands are not wooded, but overgrown with knee-high heather and this gives you a clear view of the magnificent all-round panorama . You will be amazed at how close your stalking guide will bring you to game. The stalkers are true masters of stalking and know red and sika game from a young age. It is fun to hunt with these men

All calibres suitable for deer hunting in Scotland are also permitted, but please avoid bringing your heavy big game rifle. Anything more powerful than .30-06 or 7 x 64 is viewed with suspicion. The Scots themselves shoot their red and sika game with relatively small calibres (7mm Rem), because game is a valuable commodity for them. We are happy to give you tips on weapons, equipment and optics.

Some more advice for hunting in Scotland: Dress so that you don't sweat when stalking. However, when resting on the mountain where a steady wind blows, don't freeze either. Take good shoes with gaiters, light binoculars and, if you have them, a spotting scope. Then nothing can go wrong and you can look forward to interesting and eventful hunting days.

Scotland offers many sights and it is worthwhile to add a few holiday days after the hunt. For example, the world-famous Loch Ness with the sea monster Nessie is only about an hour's drive away. During your stay you will stay in cosy lodges or small hotels (bed and breakfast, half board full board), which are furnished in the ambience of Scotland. You will feel at home there, because the Scots are very hospitable.

Things to know about hunting in Scotland:

Hunting is not allowed on Sundays in Scotland. Therefore, most of our guests arrive on this day and start hunting on Monday morning. Red deer may be hunted from 1 July to 20 October. From mid-September onwards - at least the old stags - have completely fledged. The rut takes place in the first half of October and it is a natural event of a special kind to witness the roaring of the red deer in the Highlands. A British import permit is required for entry with weapons. We can provide this. All we need is a copy of your European Firearms Pass.
